

elevators and coal yards. The Chicago, St. Paul and Kansas City Railroad opened the track in 1899. The Chicago & Northwestern was the last train company to use the rail line that originally ran from Des Moines to St. Joseph, Missouri. A few concrete mile markers giving the distance between the marker location and Kansas City can still be found standing as sentinels from the past.

The trail is full of adventure for the nature enthusiast, history buff, or those who simply wish to leave the noise and congestion of the city. Put on your walking shoes or hop on your bike and enjoy the trail.

The Great Western Trail: An Adventure for Everyone

This 16.5-mile journey can be a step back into time as travelers witness a few remaining prairie and wetland remnants. The trail preserves some of Iowa's endangered plants, those plants that had been wiped out in other parts of the state as land-use changes were made.

The Great Western trailheads are located across from the Izaak Walton League Clubhouse on Valley Drive in Des Moines and at Inwood Street in Martensdale. Your trip along the Great Western Trail is a journey into history. It will take you through the site of Lida, past the munitions train derailment and fire near North River and across the Churchville Prairie.

In 1914 no point in Iowa was more than 12 miles from a railroad. They served many small-town
